Call for papers

A "Translation – Transmission and Subversion" seminar will be organized by the East- Central- European section of the Dept of Slavonic and Firno-Ugrian Studies at the University of Delhi on March 27-28th 2025.

Translation is an activity that includes contrasting processes of transmission and subversion, and it also makes our global existence possible. In India and Europe, each linguistic region presents a different cultural entity and communication is not possible without the processes of translating an interpreting between these.

Translation is a process that allows not only communication between countries, or learning about literature, film and other types of art. It is also a tool that builds our ideas about other cultures, as the fact of what and why is being translated at a given historical moment is not without significance.

We would like to engage in a discussion related to the broadly understood topic of translation on various levels, therefore we welcome contributions in English grounded in empirical approaches to studying both inter-lingual and intra-lingual translation, as well as theoretical papers on the following topics (or any other, related themes):

- Translation and translatability
- Translation and interpretation
- Literary translation as intercultural communication
- (New) Techniques in multimedia translation (e.g. dubbing, subtitles, voice-over etc.)
- (New) Resources for translation studies (spoken corpora, multimodal corpora, interpreting transcript datasets, lexicons, databases)
- Practice and theory (analysis) of specialized translations like legal translation, medical translation, technical translation and others
- Translation in an educational process
- The translation policy
- The cooperative translation
